

Dear Employer

Hepatitis B Immunisation:

This above patient presented at our surgery and informed us that they have been advised by you to seek protection against Hepatitis B because of the nature of his/her employment.

Under Health and Safety legislation employers have a duty to provide a safe working environment. Employers should undertake a risk assessment and arrange protection for employees, including, where necessary, immunisation against Hepatitis B. If an assessment reveals a risk the employer has a duty to act and should make arrangements with a suitably qualified medical service to meet the relevant obligations.

This practice is not aware of the situation and hazards in your employee's workplace and does not have occupational expertise to advise on the risks involved.

It is therefore inappropriate for us to proceed with vaccination and we have asked your employee to return to you so that you can deal with this appropriately. We should add that the NHS does not fund Hepatitis immunisation for employment purposes.

We would be happy to discuss with you the provision of a non-NHS vaccination service (fees enclosed) once you have arranged the appropriate risk assessments and supplied us with a copy.

Yours faithfully,

The Adam Practice
